WHAT IS CATARACT?

- ◆ Clouding of the eye's lens that causes blurry vision
 - ◆ Mostly affects people over 50 but is 100% treatable
 - ◆ Without treatment, vision worsens over time

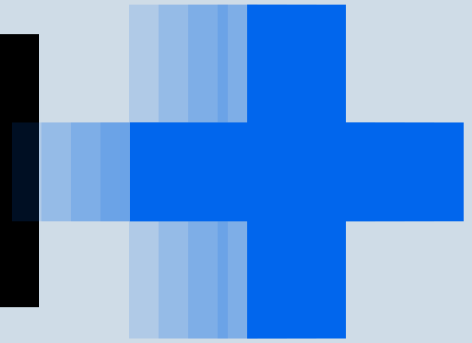

Common Symptoms

- ◆ Blurry or cloudy vision
- ◆ Difficulty seeing at night
- ◆ Sensitivity to bright lights
- ◆ Fading colors

DON'T WAIT!

Cataracts worsen over time
– Timely treatment is best.

LENS OPTIONS

MONOFOCAL

- It has one focusing distance.
- It can clear distant vision.
- It is ideal for walking, running, driving, and seeing people who are far away.
- Glasses are needed for intermediate & near work.
- In most of the cases, Glasses are not required for distant vision
- It is the cheapest option, often covered by insurance

BIFOCAL

- It has two focal points. It can clear distant & near vision
- Glasses are usually not required for most of the times, but intermediate distance vision has to be adjusted.
- Not ideal for those having glaucoma, retinal pathologies and who drive at night frequently. (They may get glare & haloes due to design of rings on the lens).

TRIFOCAL

- It has three focal points.
- It can clear distant, intermediate & near vision.
- Independence from glasses for all distances.
- Glasses are usually not required for most of the times.
- Not ideal for those having glaucoma, retinal pathologies and who drive at night frequently. (They may get glare & haloes due to design of rings on the lens).

MODIFIED MONOFOCAL

- It can clear distant and to some extent intermediate vision.
- Ideal for walking, running, driving, seeing people far away and for computer/laptop work.
- Low power glasses are needed for near work.
- Can be used for patients with glaucoma, retinal pathologies and who drive at night frequently.

TORIC

- It is used to treat astigmatism (cylindrical power >1 D) along with above mentioned lenses.
- The cost for this type of lens is high.
